PRIVATE PENSIONS AND FINANCIAL INSTITUTIONS

- If you are unsure if the deceased had private life insurance, or a private pension, contact their most recent employer. You can also try to find a recent benefit statement among their belongings.
- Contact any banks or other financial institutions with which the deceased was involved.

Your health is important too. If you are feeling overwhelmed, seek support from the Alberta Health Services Counselling Services.

TRANSFERRING THE BODY

When a family member or friend dies in long-term care, their body must be transferred. If you have pre-selected a funeral home, crematorium or transfer service, you or the long-term care home can call them immediately to retrieve the body. If a funeral home or crematorium has not been chosen; a family member or executor will need to select one immediately.

If you are unsure how to select a funeral home, crematorium or transfer service, you can contact the Alberta Funeral Services Association at: 780-412-1310 or by email: inquiry@afsa.ca

Consulting A Will

If you know there is a will, check to see who is listed as the executor. This person will be responsible for carrying out the deceased person's wishes. If you are not sure if there is a will, you can contact the estates division of the local Ontario court in the area the person lived, to check if a will has been filed. If there is no will, you may want to contact an attorney to decide who administers the estate and files the deceased person's final tax return. For more information on will and legal issues following the death of someone, contact:
